Longmorn 11 Years (2014/2025) - James Eadie

There are whiskies that captivate you from the very first sniff – and then there are those that reveal their true greatness only gradually. The Longmorn 11 Years 2014/2025 from renowned independent bottler James Eadie definitely belongs to the latter category. Read on to find out what makes this 11-years single malt so special and why it could easily be mistaken for a much older whisky.

TASTING NOTES

NOSE

The nose is dominated by bright, ripe fruit – a blend of juicy pears and yellow apples reminiscent of a sunny autumn day in the orchard. These fresh fruit notes are elegantly accompanied by creamy custard buns, whose warm sweetness creates a cosy atmosphere. Particularly noteworthy is the pronounced vanilla note that runs like a golden thread through the entire aroma profile. This is joined by subtle notes of white tea and white peach, which only fully unfold after a few minutes in the glass.

PALATE

The first impression is dominated by creamy honey, which coats the tongue like velvet and creates a luxurious foundation. The waxy notes are reminiscent of a Clynelish and blend harmoniously with the aforementioned vanilla to create a veritable taste experience. Fresh grape notes are surprisingly distinct, while a warm cinnamon note provides the necessary spice and, accompanied by aromas of burnt toast, adds a rustic, almost bakery-like dimension.

FINISH

The finish of this exceptional Longmorn is characterised by a surprising abundance of soft wood notes, which clearly demonstrate how well the distillate has harmonised with the casks. Exotic pineapple notes bring a tropical dimension into play and remind us that great whiskies are always good for surprises. The creamy honey on the palate lingers, ensuring a long-lasting, sweet finish. The finish is rounded off by a slightly perfumed note that is elegant and never intrusive.

THOUGHTS

MARCEL

This Longmorn 11 Year captivates with its creamy honey and fruity lightness that instantly lifts your spirits – a genuine feel-good highlight for relaxed evenings. Despite its youth, it shows character and depth that you wouldn't expect. Simply a whisky that's fun to drink without compromising on quality.

SASCHA

The Longmorn 11 Year 2014/2025 from James Eadie impresses with its balanced interplay of fruity, creamy, and spicy notes, alongside a complex, long-lasting finish. The harmonious cask maturation and precise aromatic structure demonstrate solid technical craftsmanship, making it appealing to lovers of well-structured Speyside whiskies – albeit with a slight potential for further refinement.
