St. Kilian Exceptional Range Mizunara – Peated

Attention whisky nerds: If you think you've tasted everything - stop for a moment. The St. Kilian Exceptional Range Mizunara - Peated is not a standard bottling, but an aromatic border crosser that is anything but predictable. This limited single cask bottling from the renowned St. Kilian Distillery combines Japanese elegance with German innovative spirit.

TASTING NOTES

NOSE

The first moment? Surprisingly restrained. A hint of cold smoke, almost shy, lies over a warm, dark fruity centre. Plums, sultanas, a touch of caramel, light but present. And then there is this 'funky' element - elusive, slightly fermented, perhaps a greeting from the Mizunara oak? It remains exciting.

PALATE

Boom. On the palate, the whisky hits like a spice merchant from Kyoto. Black pepper, clove, sandalwood and tart herbs - complex, powerful, almost impossible to categorise. The smoke remains in the background, allowing the spices to take centre stage. The texture: extremely full-bodied, almost creamy, but with an edgy, wildly natural depth. Not beginner material - this is a sensory labyrinth.

FINISH

The smoke only returns in the finish - cold, pebbly, slightly ashy, a bit like a campfire at dawn. Then fruit again, this time red berries, subtly embedded. The finish is long, voluminous, complex - and this is where the whisky becomes an experience.

THOUGHTS

MARCEL

Not a whisky for the faint-hearted, but that's exactly what makes the St. Kilian Exceptional Range Mizunara – Peated so thrilling. The surprising spice notes and the mysterious Mizunara oak invite you to dive in and marvel – an experience you won't forget anytime soon.

SASCHA

With a complex balance of spicy wood notes, bitter herbs, and restrained smoke, this Mizunara-Peated impresses through its layered structure and powerful finish. Technically flawless, it challenges the connoisseur with its dense aromatic profile and the unusual interplay of Mizunara oak and peat.
